Daniel Defoe (1660 – 1731)

was born in the family of nonconformists (Dissenters)- those who refused to accept the rules of an established national Church.

His father, a butcher, was wealthy enough to give his son a good education. Daniel was to become a priest in the Nonconformist Church, but when his training was completed, he decided to engage in business as a hosier. It was his cherished desire to become wealthy, but his wish was never fulfilled.
